

Let It Bleed

or

You Can't Always Get What You Want
*(But if you try sometimes, well, you might find
You get what you need)*

(7 October 2026)

An open letter to my son Arthur ¹

On September 28, 2026, a dear friend of fifty years, who lives more than one thousand kilometers away and whom I haven't seen in nearly a decade, acted graciously as a remote messenger and sent you and Jacqueline, your mother, a link to my main GitHub file repository.

Five days later, after nearly seven years of unbroken silence, you apparently deleted all our past WhatsApp correspondence and replaced it with one single link:

Since you supplied no words of explanation, I cannot know for sure what meaning you intended me to take from the song. However, I attempted to find a logical equivalent to the verses, and I propose:

Some of what you want you can never get, while Trying is not enough to get even what is just needed,
With the consequence that
How do you get what you need just to survive?

The messenger has observed to me, however, that it is the fate of most, if not of all, to never obtain anything of what one wants, a position which plain experience seems to contradict.

To test the logic of this view against the physical reality of life, please find hereafter a limited list of things I would want, let alone would need, accompanied by some remarks.

As a preamble, please recall that I have lived in total seclusion and isolation throughout the period since you stopped visiting and calling, a long ways from the closest neighbor, my only company being animal life, in particular seven (or eight, depending on the day) half-feral dogs, who do provide not only good and faithful company, but also the only security there is in these remote parts.

Because denial is a common psychological defense against deeply unpleasant realities, I ask anyone reading this paper to make his or her own assessment, by indicating in the two columns to the right of the table below whether my circumstances are, in fact, absolutely common (Column C) or, on the contrary, quite uncommon (Column U).

It seems unlikely that nobody would ever have of any of the following needs or wishes satisfied:

1. A series of visits to the dentist to repair six painful broken molars, the last visit dating back 26 years ago;
2. A series of visits to the clinic necessary to operate the two massive painful inguinal hernias that occurred 9 years ago as a consequence of hard work done without any help;
3. Assisted weeks-long convalescence at home after each operation;
4. Some medical attention at the age of 72, noting that my last visit to a physician dates back nearly 16 years ago;
5. Some treatment for the four syncopes with short cardiac arrests I experienced in total solitude on September 6, 2026, between the hours of 11 AM and 2 PM;
6. Some consideration for three shorter losses of consciousness I experienced on the afternoon of September 28;
7. The reestablishment of mail delivery to my isolated location, which was interrupted four months ago and precludes timely package delivery (on the bright side, the grocery store located 32 kilometers away continues its monthly deliveries);
8. The ability to obtain basic prescription glasses;
9. The ability to obtain an operation on my left eye for what seems to be cataract;

- 10. Access to transportation, the lack of which has barred me from ever leaving my property in the past seven years, even for a minute;
- 11. An end to the complete seizure of my bank accounts, including of the legally unseizable minimum bank balance of 650 euros;
- 12. The return of nearly two million dollars owed to me, which has been denied through a decade of fraudulent legal actions across two countries and ten separate courts of law;
- 13. An end to the complete seizure of my house and property;
- 14. Reparation and compensation for the nearly consummated desecration and spoliation of our cemetery family vault at the hands of the local government;
- 15. Reparation and compensation for the environmental destruction of large tracts of my property by governmental action;
- 16. Reparation and compensation for the illegal diversion of my water table, rivers, and springs at the hands of the local government, with the resulting total dry-up of water resources eight months out of the year and the corresponding steep loss of property value;
- 17. Correction of the fraudulent assessment of my property for tax purposes;
- 18. Consideration of my very limited income of 800 euros per month;

After nearly seven years of silence, an explanation of my son's refusal to state openly the general reasons for severing all communication with me;21. In particular, what exactly is so unsavory that he will not disclose it;22. An explanation as to why, if the reasons for my son's refusal are so unpleasant, I consistently ask our common friends to beg him to disclose those reasons;23. The reestablishment of access to basic indoor sanitation;24. Access to garbage disposal, which I haven't had for 9 years, despite being charged 7,700 euros for it. | | | among numerous other things I indeed would want, let alone would need.

If it is truly the basic fate of nobody on Earth to ever get what is wanted or just needed for survival, then these checked lines above should reveal that my daily existence is completely ordinary.

However, if the checked lines reveal a substantial departure from the ordinary, then the proposition that nobody ever gets what is wanted cannot, by itself, explain the circumstances described above. It leaves unanswered the specific question of how and why those circumstances came about.

I have consistently asked our common friends whether you might be willing to explain the reasons for your decision to cease communicating with me, not in order to assign blame to my only son, who is to me irreplaceable, but because I would rather know an unpleasant truth than allow silence, supposition, or misunderstanding to become the permanent record between us.

If there is something I have done, or something you believe I have done, that led to nearly seven years of silence, I remain willing to hear it, however unpleasant it may be, and to respond to it as accurately and openly as I can.

Nothing in this letter is intended to require a response from you or to prescribe what that response should be, but it is my belief and experience that whenever truth is genuinely sought, things are better said than inferred.
